Jack &
Stish

Jack and Stish were my grandparents - Jack was a textile designer, and Stish an artist and practitioner of home crafts. Jack met Stish in New York when he immigrated from Europe in the 1930s and they savored clothing and design as a way to express their creative freedom and to celebrate their lives and their connections with others. Their commitment to design and the love they shared inspired me to make this clothing line, which is a merging of art and life, style and comfort, past and future.

I have been designing patterns and having them digitally woven into blankets for several years, using source imagery from cultural memory, such as video games and abstracting them into patterns. While people love their blankets at home, I wanted to make something they could wear in daily life and transformed some of the blankets into clothing, two designs, each with 4 patterns. Like many parts of my practice, my jacket and design line has emerged organically - responding to the feedback of wearers as well as looking to the inspiration of past.

all designs available in 3 cuts

boxier and shorter, based on an oversized button down flannel shirt, with straight geometric lines with a softening curve around the bottom.
pockets available interior instead on special request

stish

longer and flared at the bottom for a softer look - the curved lapel can be folded to create a blazer-like look, or left flat it has an organic kimono-like line.

Feels like you're wrapped in a cozy blanket. Woven cotton ensures longevity of both the pattern and the jacket itself, creating an instant heirloom.
